A Fond Farewell, a Warm Welcome

By Thadeus Greenson

thad@northcoastjournal.com

If you take a gander at our staff box this week, you'll notice some changes afoot here at the Journal.

First, you'll likely notice something missing. Assistant editor/staff writer Grant Scott-Goforth has moved on after more than three years as an award winning reporter and photographer here at the Journal. This is a sad day for us, as Grant was a stalwart reporter and editor whose contributions ran far beyond his weekly bylines. Sure, he brought you nuanced, thoughtful coverage of the people and issues of our community, but he also did a million things behind the scenes to make sure that when the Journal hit newsstands every week it was the best paper it could be. Grant is also one of those people who manages to show up to work every day with a smile and a sense of humor, and who met every obstacle in his path with patience, tenacity and perspective.

Grant will be sorely missed here, both in the office and these pages, but it appears our loss is Humboldt State University's gain. Grant has signed on to write and edit for the school's alumni magazine, among other things up there, and we wish him nothing but the best moving forward. And we'll take this opportunity to publicly offer our thanks for the years of sweat equity he put in here. Grant, you made this a better paper. Thank you.

Second of all, where Grant's name used to be, you'll notice a new — yet familiar — one in its place. We are very excited to announce that Kim Wear is joining our team to fill Grant's old shoes. If Kim's name rings a bell, it's because she helmed the Times-Standard as its managing editor for eight years, during which she reported on or orchestrated coverage of the county's biggest stories.

A southern California transplant, Kim cut her teeth reporting for San Diego's North County Times, where she covered schools and courts. After following her heart to Humboldt, Kim covered just about everything for the T-S, including education, courts, the city of Eureka and so much more. She took over as the paper's city editor in 2007, and stepped into the role of managing editor about a year later. Ask around about Kim. You'll find she has a reputation for being smart, fair and tireless.

Kim's eager to get back to her roots a bit and do more writing and reporting. We're excited to give her the opportunity and lucky to have her.

So, please join us in wishing Grant a bon voyage and welcoming Kim aboard. ●

Poor Show

Editor:

Publisher Judy Hodgson begins her column "Maybe Next Year (July 14)," "I think we can all agree that last week was a particularly bad week for news" — then says she was in Austin, not Dallas.

A bad week for news?!

It was a tragic week for humanity!

Shamelessly exploiting the heinous murders in Baton Rouge, Dallas and St. Paul as her "news hook," Hodgson proceeds to insult readers with her vanity and callous disregard of the depth of our national tragedy. She serves up a callow travel narrative about an obscure newspaper convention that opens with chicken-fried steak and black peas.

"See me, I'm a hot shot in the big city!"

Hodgson is actually saying, in a transparent and acutely embarrassing advertisement of herself.

She closes (naturally) with a self-centered lament that her obscure back country newspaper didn't win a free speech award.

"So I didn't get that shot of tequila this year on behalf of the Journal editorial team," she sobs.

Hodgson should spend six months on assignment on a big city police beat or in Baghdad, Damascus, Dhaka, eastern Ukraine, Mogadishu, Nice or Sana'a.

By the way, Ms. Hodgson, your own county is one of California's murder capitals.

Paul Mann, McKinleyville

True Ward? I'll Pass

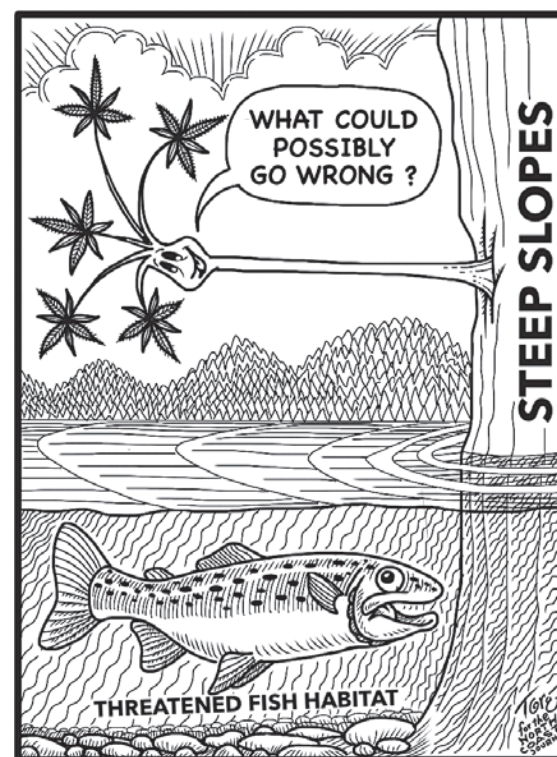

Editor:

First, what the U.S. Census calls "race" I prefer to think of as ancestry. By this definition the current ancestry of Eureka is just about 80 percent white. If our city council is in fact 80 percent white, I would not be surprised (NC) Daily, July 14).

Second, according to the 2010 Census, there are 27,191 people in Eureka. It appears that the five wards of Eureka are roughly equally populated. This would put 5,438 people in each ward. In the November 2014 election, 3,359 votes were enough to elect either candidate in the two contested seats. One ward could elect the candidate of its choice regardless of how the other four wards vote.

There is not a representation or fairness problem. There is no need for a true ward system in Eureka.

The Text Trail

Public defender to probe racist, homophobic sheriff's office texts

By Thadeus Greenson

thad@northcoastjournal.com

The Humboldt County Sheriff's Office is sending some of its leadership staff to tolerance training due to a text message scandal that's come to light in the wake of the sexual assault trial of former Sgt. Jason Scott Daniels.

A jury acquitted Daniels, 43, of a pair of sexual assault charges on June 16 that stemmed from allegations that he'd sexually assaulted and battered two women in unrelated incidents while on duty in 2013. Daniels, who joined the sheriff's office in 2000 and was promoted to sergeant in April of 2011, was fired with cause after his arrest in October of 2013. Sheriff Mike Downey declined to discuss the specifics of Daniels' termination, but said the sergeant was fired after an internal investigation into conduct that wasn't directly related to his criminal charges.

In the aftermath of Daniels' acquittal, court documents have come to light that detail a host of evidence that was ruled inadmissible at trial, including an empty condom box and a methamphetamine pipe found in the trunk of his patrol car, and some 700 inappropriate text messages allegedly found on his cell phone. According to court documents, the texts included a host of offensive and sexually charged language, as well as dozens of inappropriate photos, and many were sent to "co-workers, including those of lower ranking working at the sheriff's office."

Specifically, the texts included terms ranging from the sexually crass (boobies, boner, vag) and sexist (bitch, cunt, slut, whore) to the racist (nigger, dot head) and homophobic (fag, gay ass), according to court documents. It's unclear how many employees these texts were distributed to and whether they were all sent by Daniels, as Humboldt County District Attorney Maggie Fleming declined to comment on the case now that it's been adjudicated and Downey said he couldn't discuss it in any detail due to state laws protecting police officer personnel records from public disclosure.

While Downey confirmed there was an internal affairs investigation into the text messages, he declined to say how many employees sent or received them, if any of Daniels' subordinates reported them to a supervisor and whether any disciplinary action was taken against any of those involved beyond Daniels. But, the sheriff

I don't think there's a cultural issue that's the sheriff's office.

did say his department has implemented additional tolerance training in the aftermath of the investigation.

"Obviously, we did do an investigation into this and we did institute additional training," he said. "You can read what you want into that as far as if there were any other substantiated allegations against other deputies."

Specifically, Downey said his office has sent employees to Los Angeles to take courses at the Simon Wiesenthal Center for Tolerance, which is run by a global human rights organization and offers a variety of trainings and programs, including ones for law enforcement.

Additionally, Downey said all his department's sergeants are being cycled through a six-month training at the Sherman Block Supervisory Leadership Institute, which also includes courses at the Simon Wiesenthal Center. The sheriff also added that his department has instituted revised sexual harassment and sensitivity policies, which employees are required to review annually.

But Downey quickly dismissed the notion the text messages in the Daniels case are in any way emblematic of a cultural problem at the sheriff's office.

"Absolutely not," he said. "I don't think there's a cultural issue that's permeated within the sheriff's office. I think within any work setting you're going to have isolated issues that come up. The sheriff's office does not tolerate that and we don't foster that kind of feeling or belief in any way and we've taken steps to provide ample training to make sure these types of issues don't come up again."

While it's unclear at this point how widely the texts on Daniels' phone were distributed or how many officers may have been involved, the case draws some parallels to a recent scandal that rocked the San Francisco Police Department after a series of text messages were uncovered amid an investigation into allegations that an off-duty officer committed a sexual assault.

A subsequent internal affairs investigation discovered texts that used "nigger" to refer to black people, "rag heads" for people of Middle Eastern descent and "beaners" to refer to Latinos. Discovery of the texts has prompted the San Francisco Public Defender's Office to review more than 200 criminal cases for signs of racial bias. Already, more than a dozen cases have been dismissed, according to an article in the Los Angeles Times.

Four officers were implicated in the investigation. Three have left the department and the fourth is being disciplined, according to the police chief.

Similar scandals have gripped the Los Angeles County Sheriff's Office and the Oakland Police Department this year.

Humboldt County Public Defender Kevin Robinson said in the immediate wake of Daniels' arrest, his office conducted a review of pending and recently closed cases involving the former sergeant to see if any needed to be reopened or reinvestigated for evidence of malfeasance. In total, he said the office found "less than a handful of cases" and nothing that raised any alarm.

But Robinson said he was concerned to learn of the text messages. "Obviously, it's a concern for the Public Defender's Office whenever there are racist or homophobic comments from a deputy who's in charge of conducting or participating in investigations because you can't be sure the investigations are then carried out in a fair and impartial manner," Robinson said.

Robinson added that he anticipates talking to his senior deputies and investigators and coming up with an approach for looking into the issue, mostly to determine if there are active deputies or sergeants within the sheriff's office who were implicated in sending these types of messages.

For his part, Downey said the whole incident has been unfortunate but he feels confident the office has addressed it, starting by hand-picking employees to send to the tolerance trainings who he felt "would have the most influence on the rest of the agency when they get back."

"We don't condone this and we don't think it's proper behavior and we're taking steps to make sure it isn't repeated in the future," he said. "We take this seriously and the office has taken steps to make sure these types of issues don't come up again." ●

The Naked Truth

By Linda Stansberry
newsroom@northcoastjournal.com

This week's Republican National Convention was marked by the appearance of 100 naked women holding mirrors, a photography project by Spencer Tunick. Tunick has positioned the naked bodies of people in 70 different photoshoots across the world. In a statement prior to the RNC, Tunick said, "By holding mirrors, we hope to suggest that women are a reflection and embodiment of nature, the sun, the sky and the land."

I mention Tunick's project not just to explain to the Journal's beleaguered I.T. team what the heck is going on with my browser history (for those not afraid of rippling, dimpled white flesh and ungroomed pubic thatches, Tunick's photos are actually pretty amazing) but to juxtapose this political statement against one rolling (sorry) toward Philadelphia next week: a 51-foot joint to be held aloft by cannabis lovers outside the Democratic National Convention.

Did I say joint? Sorry, that's what the rest of the click-bait news sites are calling it. Really, it's a 51-foot balloon that looks like a joint, and it previously appeared in D.C. and New York City. Said inflatable will not be smokable, although protestors are also staging a "flash toke" at 4:20 p.m. on July 25. While the toke-in is being called "Smell the Freedom," a previous protest at the White House involved the mass consumption of edibles rather than smoking, to protect attendees from arrest. Sounds sleepy. A top priority for protestors is the de-criminalization of marijuana and its removal from the Federal Controlled Substances Act. The presumptive nominees of both parties have voiced approval of states' rights to decriminalize marijuana.

Did I say marijuana? Sorry – that's just what the rest of the country is calling it. Meanwhile, on the left coast, Gov. Jerry Brown has approved Senate Bill 837, which codifies a number of regulations around Medical Cannabis. S.B. 837, introduced in January, underwent a cosmetic overhaul in the Assembly, where all references to "Medical Marijuana" were changed to "Medical Cannabis." Cannabis, you might recall from previous columns, is the preferred alternative of some activists who dislike the allegedly racist baggage of "marijuana" or "marihuana." Said change was accomplished – to the best of our knowledge – without naked buttocks and/or inflatable props.

Meanwhile, in our corner of the world, the county is preparing to launch a pilot program that will help "track and trace" Humboldt County herb through the supply chain. The software for the tracking program is being provided for free by SICPA Product Security, LLC. It allows cultivators to stamp their products with scannable QR codes. Consumers can download a smartphone app allowing them to confirm that their weed was, indeed, grown in Humboldt, and which growing practices were used.

From a branding perspective, it's kind of a brilliant move. If canny cannabis connoisseurs in Silicon Valley are truly enamored enough with our "artisanal brand," as the county's website puts it, that they'll want to pull out their smart phones and show off their ethical-sourcing bonafides to their dates, this could be a huge success. But from a public policy perspective, with those on the front lines of reining in the Green Rush admitting that there's a horse-cart, chicken-egg effect between legalization-taxation and taxation-enforcement, how much marijuana will actually meet the track and trace program's standards for real compliance with local and state regulations is questionable. To torture a metaphor, just like RNC attendees recoiling from Tunick's muses, the track and trace program also has a "back end" problem. ●

Providing the highest quality medicine possible, safe access, and empowering patients with information.

Over the past 16 years Humboldt Patient Resource Center has worked diligently to be the premier provider of medical cannabis to the City of Arcata and Humboldt County. With the vast amount of new medical research becoming available to patients, many new patients are looking to cannabis as a realistic alternative to some of their pharmaceutical uses. At HPRC our staff services both new and experienced patients.

At a permitted and regulated cannabis collective like HPRC, patients' wellness is the priority. Our collective promotes transparency through a lab testing protocol, screening medicine for potency, mold, mildew, and pesticides, ensuring cannabis is safe for patient consumption. Through our conscious cultivation and Clean Green Garden Certification we are able to provide medicine free of toxic pesticides and growth regulators. Our employees are food handling certified, ensuring medicine is safely processed, stored, and dispensed.

At HPRC you will find that questions are promoted and our goal is to assist patients in finding confidence around their cannabis use. We believe that our understanding of cannabis as a medicine is made stronger through scientific research, anecdotal evidence, patient feedback, and the ability to report that information back to patients. We operate our collective in the City of Arcata, whose culture of clean organic food, a supportive community, and preserving our natural wonders inspire us in our daily decision making.

Cannabis medicine is no longer limited to smoking flower buds. At HPRC you will find flowers, topicals, tinctures, concentrates, lotions, edibles, clones, transdermal patches and many more applications. Always talk with your doctor when making changes to your recommended medicine. Stop by HPRC today to investigate cannabis as a real alternative for your medical needs. Whether you are a first time user or an experienced cannabis user, our staff is here to assist you and provide quality medicine, safe access, and to empower you with information.

Grief in the Friendly City

The California Highway Patrol has located the gray Jeep believed to have been involved in a hit and run accident in Fortuna the night of July 12 that left two teenage girls dead. The vehicle was in the backyard of the residence of one of the victim's families when police served a search warrant on the property the following afternoon.

CHP officer Cy May said a suspect has been identified as the potential driver in the case but remains at large, whereabouts unknown. May said CHP is not releasing the identity of the suspect at this time, and declined to comment on whether the suspect is related to one of the victims. CHP was also still declining to release the identities or ages of the victims as this edition of the Journal went to press, a full week after the accident.

Reached by phone, Eureka attorney Ben Okin said he is representing the suspect in the case and that, through him, she made contact with police on July 13. "We made contact with law enforcement," Okin said. "They didn't know who she was. We made contact with them. ... As far as I know, at the time we made contact on the driver's behalf, law enforcement didn't have any information on the identity of the driver. That (call) is what led to them being able to serve the search warrant. It wasn't something they discovered, as far as I know."

"We offered to turn the driver in," Okin continued, "but law enforcement wants to do some more investigation before they make a formal arrest."

Okin declined to identify his client, saying he's "leaving it to law enforcement to decide the appropriate time to do that" as the investigation moves forward. In a July 19 email to the Journal, May urged patience and said CHP is doing all it can for a "thorough and precise" investigation.

The accident occurred around 9:15 p.m., when a southbound vehicle on Eel River Drive hit two young teenagers who were skateboarding northbound in the southbound lane. The vehicle then fled the scene, reportedly heading eastbound on Drake Hill Road, according to CHP's initial press release. The vehicle CHP found and seized on July 13 was in a backyard on Becker Lane, which is off Eel River Drive, south from Drake Hill Road and about a mile from the accident scene.

May said it was a combination of community tips and investigators in the field that led CHP to the Becker Lane residence. He said nobody was at the home when police arrived, but officers were able to obtain a search warrant for the property in order to seize the vehicle, which was found behind a closed fence in the backyard and had damage matching debris found at the accident scene.

Food Trucks: As this edition of the Journal went to press, the Eureka City Council was discussing whether to approve an ordinance that would allow mobile food vendors to operate in large swaths of the city. Eureka Seeks Dismissal: The city of Eureka is asking a federal judge to dismiss the lawsuit brought on behalf of 11 plaintiffs challenging the legality of the city's May 2 clearing of homeless encampments in the PalCo Marsh. With the eviction complete, the city is arguing the suit is moot. Plaintiffs, meanwhile, argue the suit still has merit due to the city's no-camping ordinance. POSTED 07.20.16

Eureka police are seizing firearms at a staggering rate.
The question is, why?

By Thadeus Greenson
thad@northcoastjournal.com

There was the black .45 caliber handgun investigators picked up next to a dead 20-year-old at the scene of a shootout with a California Highway Patrol officer on Q Street. Then, about a month later, there was the loaded AR-15 style assault rifle with high-capacity magazines pulled from under the hood of a Dodge pickup truck in the Bayshore Mall parking lot. More recently, there was the loaded pistol officers found underneath a man nodding off in his car, with the engine idling and a hypodermic syringe still in his arm, at a gas station on Broadway.

The Eureka Police Department seizes guns of all types, from snub-nosed revolvers and semi-automatic pistols to hunting rifles and shotguns. And it takes the guns for a host of reasons: some because they were used in a crime; others because they are with someone who can't legally have them; and some simply for safekeeping.

And, a recent Journal analysis reveals, EPD is seizing these firearms at a staggering rate — one seemingly unmatched in similar sized cities throughout the state and one that trumps some of the nation's largest police departments in its most violent cities.

As Chicago surged its way to recording a nation-leading 468 homicides last year, its police chief made national headlines when he announced his officers were seizing a gun every 72 minutes, on average. When the year ended, officers in the Windy City had taken a total of 3,709 firearms off the streets, or about 1.36 per every 1,000 city residents.

That same year, EPD officers seized 6.06 firearms per 1,000 city residents, a number that dwarfs every comparison the Journal made in its analysis of gun seizure records from more than 10 police agencies. In fact, the only agency to even approach Eureka's seizure rate was the Humboldt County Sheriff's Office, which clocked 4.48 seized firearms per 1,000 residents in its jurisdiction last year, according to the Journal analysis.

Coupled with the county's homicide rate in recent years, the analysis makes clear there is a gun problem in Humboldt County and its epicenter sits in Eureka. No matter your views on gun control and the Second Amendment, the numbers indicate the area has alarmingly high rates of firearms falling into the hands of people who are either legally prohibited from possessing them or prone to making bad choices while holding them, and often both.

"It's troublesome," says EPD Chief Andrew Mills.

Perhaps most troublesome to Mills and his law enforcement cohorts is the local homicide rate. In the six-year period from 2010 through 2015, Humboldt County recorded 63 homicides, or about 7.84 per 100,000 residents annually. The national rate for 2014, the last year for which full statistics are available, was 4.5 homicides per 100,000 residents. Humboldt County's average of 7.4 would have ranked higher

Top: The Eureka Police Department seized more than six firearms per 1,000 city residents in 2015, a rate that nearly equals those of police departments in Oakland, Baltimore and Chicago combined. Courtesy of EPD than all but two states in 2014, and far outpaced California's rate of 4.4.

The vast majority of Humboldt's killings over that six-year period — including eight of the 10 in Eureka since Mills took over as the city's police chief in late 2013 — were the result of gun violence.

Across from Mills' desk at EPD headquarters sits a kind of collage, a smattering of about 30 8-by-10 photographs that wallpaper a door and part of the wall. The pictures combine to depict a small arsenal of guns that Mills' officers pulled from cars, pockets, hiding places and homes over the span of several months this year.

Mills explains that there's a wide variety of ways that police officers wind up taking possession of a firearm. Most often, Mills says, the weapons are found during searches — of people, residences and cars. Sometimes these searches are the result of a warrant or probable cause, others come as part of someone's terms of probation or parole. But the police department can also take guns for "safekeeping" in some situations, like when investigating domestic violence complaints or referring people for mental health treatment because they may be a danger to themselves and others. Occasionally, guns are surrendered to the department voluntarily by concerned family members or people temporarily prohibited from owning them due to a restraining order. And, rarely, guns are simply found and taken to the department to be turned in.

EPD was unable to provide a breakdown of exactly how its officers came to seize 163 firearms last year, underscoring the apparent fact that gun seizure data — or most gun data, for that matter — is hard to find. In researching this story, the Journal submitted records requests to more than a dozen police departments throughout the state asking for the total number of firearms they'd seized in 2015, including those taken as evidence, confiscated, found and taken for safekeeping. A handful of departments — including the Redding Police Department — responded that their data management systems were incapable of compiling such statistics. Told our request would necessitate officers poring through paper case files to come up with a total, we gave those agencies a pass and moved on. (EPD only switched to a case management system capable of generating such data a couple of years ago.)

The numbers we got back were startling. First, we tried to find a comparably sized city with some similar crime problems to Eureka's. We settled on East

Palo Alto, population 29,143, and learned its notoriously busy police department seized 36 firearms in 2015, or 1.24 per 1,000 residents. Then, we talked to some people who pointed out that, as the county seat, Eureka's population swells during the day, making it similar to cities twice its size. So we looked at some cities of 60,000 or so residents: National City seized 104 firearms in 2015, or 1.74 per 1,000 residents; South San Francisco seized 21 for a miniscule .38 firearms per 1,000 residents. Realizing those cities might be too urban for a fair comparison, we looked at Sutter County's Yuba City, tucked along a small mountain range about 40 miles north of Sacramento. With a population of 65,000 — more than double Eureka's 26,913 — Yuba police seized 83 guns last year, 1.27 per 1,000 residents.

To try to put those numbers in some perspective, we got some data from some of the nation's most notoriously violent cities: Oakland, Baltimore and Chicago, which combined to record 772 homicides in 2015. Baltimore seized 3.05 guns per 1,000 residents; Oakland 2.38; and Chicago 1.36.

From the Journal's analysis, it's clear EPD — as well as the sheriff's office — is seizing weapons at a very high rate, but it's incredibly difficult to pinpoint why. First off, there's no way to quantify how many guns in any given city are illegally possessed. The numbers we have are just those that police actually find. Maybe Eureka's officers are just really good at finding guns, or maybe Eureka criminals are exceptionally bad at hiding them. But there's not even a way to find out how many legal guns are out there in any given city or county, making comparisons difficult.

It all seems so simple on crime shows: A cop finds a gun at a murder scene, takes it back to the precinct and types the serial number into a computer that instantly spits back a full history of registered owners. But that's not at all how it works.

In reality, the federal Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives is the only agency that legally has the records and authority to trace a firearm back to its origin. The NRA has lobbied hard for decades to prohibit the federal government from creating any kind of national gun registry or database to track firearms and their owners. (The fear of a registry is something that also comes up surrounding the topic of expanded background checks, though it's explicitly prohibited under current federal law.)

firearm’s origin, it has to turn to the ATF for help, which agencies did 344,000 times in 2015, according to the bureau. When ATF receives a request, its agents hit the phones. First, they call the firearm manufacturer, which can check its records and pass on which wholesaler it sold the gun to. Then, agents call the wholesaler, which should be able to pass on the name of the retail gun dealer, who should in turn be able to tell agents who purchased the gun. That’s the best case scenario: that a string of phone calls will help ATF agents find out when, where and by whom the gun was originally purchased. There’s no tracking of subsequent sales and transfers, and no way to compile a complete chain of legal ownership.

And in the worst case scenarios, say when the gun retailer has gone out of business, these traces can turn into weeks-long endeavors. By law, if a gun seller is closing its doors, it has to turn all of its sales records over to the ATF. These records are often in paper form and show up at the ATF’s tracing center in West Virginia by the truckload — sometimes 3,000 boxes at a time, according to a recent story by National Public Radio. Agents then have to painstakingly leaf through thousands of documents to find a record of sale.

“The idea that we have a computer database and you just type in a serial number and it pops out some purchaser’s name is a myth,” ATF Special Agent Charles Houser told NPR, pointing to a table filled with battered, burned and waterlogged records. “These look like the Dead Sea Scrolls to me. These are Hurricane Katrina records we kept. Businesses went underwater, and they went out of business. But they still shipped their records here, and we dried these out in the parking lot.” In 2015, the ATF traced 37,043 firearms seized by police in California during criminal investigations and was able to identify the “source state” 23,716 times. Seventy percent of those traced guns were first sold in the Golden State, with an average of 13 years passing between the gun’s initial sale and its use in a crime, according to an ATF report.

California is known for having some of the strictest gun laws in the nation, but there’s little on the books that helps police keep track of firearms. Under state law, residents must report firearm ownership to the state Department of Justice and register them into its Automated Firearms System. But this information is not public and there are limits to the extent to which police can even access it. When we contacted DOJ trying to figure out how many guns were registered in California, and in Humboldt County and Eureka specifically, a spokesman said that wasn’t information the department had.

For his part, Mills said EPD doesn’t even bother attempting to trace most of the firearms it seizes, believing the investment of time and resources needed isn’t worth the limited information that comes back.

It seems the only public data about geographic gun ownership comes in the form of concealed carry permits, which have to be approved by the local sheriff and are a matter of public record. According to a report by the Center for Investigative Reporting, Humboldt County had 869 active concealed carry permits at the start of 2015, accounting for about 1.23 percent of active permits in the state. Humboldt County is home, meanwhile, to about .3 percent of the state’s population.

It’s hard to say whether concealed carry permits are a good indicator of overall gun ownership rates, but they're the only real metric we have. But they give little to no indication of why police seizures are so high locally. As Mills says, the majority of guns seized by his department aren't registered and aren't legally owned.

Asked why his department sees so many guns, Mills doesn't pause to think. To start, he points to a "very heavy" gun culture here. Hunting is a way of life for many, and there are hosts of self protection advocates and "Second Amendment types." Then, there's the dual cultural legacies of Humboldt County's billion-dollar illicit marijuana industry and its staggeringly high drug addiction rates.

"The drug culture here in Humboldt County is certainly as pronounced as I've ever seen and many of these people are armed to the teeth," Mills says, adding that people have guns to protect crops, stashes and cash, and that he's taken to telling his officers that "dope and guns" go together. Sheriff Mike Downey agrees, saying it's rare to see a drug raid in Humboldt that doesn't turn up firearms. "There's a drug culture here where guns are very prevalent," he says.

But Mills, Downey and others contacted for this story say the issue is far more complex than Humboldt County's drug culture and that there are likely a host of other contributing factors. For example, Humboldt County's rates of domestic violence run roughly 50 percent higher than the state average, which could mean local departments are taking more firearms for safekeeping after domestic violence reports than agencies in other parts of the state.

Without better data, there's simply no way to know why Humboldt County's numbers skew so high. Mills, however, has a theory. He thinks Eureka's high rates of firearm theft contribute mightily to the numbers of guns on the streets and in the hands of people who shouldn't have them.

Statewide in 2015, about .26 firearms were reported stolen for every 1,000 California residents, according to statistics from the Department of Justice. In Eureka, that number was 3.38 — a 13-fold increase. It bears noting that Eureka's 2015 theft numbers skew high due to the burglary of a local sporting goods store that saw dozens of guns stolen. But the department still recorded 2 firearm theft reports per 1,000 residents in 2014, and was on pace to record 2.2 through the first quarter of this year, both numbers being more than seven times the state average.

These high theft numbers make some sense. After all, it appears — anecdotally and through the only metric publicly available — that Humboldt County has high gun ownership rates. Eureka has very high property crime rates, including vehicle break ins and burglaries. And Mills says stolen firearms have an immediate black market waiting for them, making them a more lucrative target than flat screen televisions and electronics.

Last November, a frustrated Mills abandoned his push for a city ordinance that would have made it a crime for people to leave their guns unattended and unsecured when away from their home or business. In Mills' eyes, the idea was straightforward: "People have a right to bear arms, but that's just the point — to bear arms. Not to leave them lying around unprotected," he said at the time. "[The proposed ordinance] was written specifically so if someone is home or at their business, they can have all the guns they want lying about because they're in control of their firearms. It has nothing to do with, 'When somebody goes to bed at night, can they have a gun on their nightstand?' Of course they can. This is America."

But the proposed ordinance drew a fierce and immediate backlash from some who felt it was an infringement on Second Amendment rights. Mills dropped it, opting instead for a public education campaign under the mantra, "Hide it. Lock it. Keep it."

Mills said he feels conflicted about gun issues locally. Asked if he would support laws that made it easier to trace guns and their owners, Mills says it makes him uneasy as it could be seen as an infringement on people's rights and he's not sure how much it would really help. After all, he suspects lots of the guns his officers find in Eureka have been handed off multiple times since their last legal sale. But the day-to-day reality faced by his officers is untenable.

"In some ways, the Second Amendment people are right: This gun is not going to get up and shoot someone on its own. But people make bad decisions. As a society, we are proving that over and over again," he said. "I think it's the same pattern everywhere. Certainly, no county has been immune from gun violence."

Mills sees gun violence as a complicated knot of mental health and addiction issues, drug cultures and the prevalence of firearms. It's about families and support systems, social services and communities. It's about multiple systems failing at once.

Sitting behind his desk and glancing at his wall of photos, Mills sighs. "Those are the kinds of things that, if we don't come to grips with them as a society, this gun thing is going to spiral out of control." ●

Paddling out on the North Coast

Story and photos

by Sean Jansen

getout@northcoastjournal.com

Sun's out, surf's up. Sean Jansen

The surf scene up here is unique. There is so much more that goes into a session in Humboldt County than in a daily check of different beaches along the California coast. The water is colder, the ocean angrier, and the sea life much more abundant and a little less friendly. If you want to set foot in the sub 50-degree water and take a chance at surfing, you need to be prepared and respectful. But if you have that in mind, you might score and have a great time.

The temperature is the first scare that prevents travelers from entering the waters up here. On average, the temperature is around 53 degrees. But winter water temps can drop to a chilly 46 degrees and the summer temps can rise to a not-so-warm 57 degrees. Summer months are accompanied by strong north winds and thick fog. Our part of the Pacific Ocean requires a 5-millimeter wetsuit with a hood and booties for your feet. Wetsuits are never optional; hypothermia can occur in as little as 10 to 15 minutes at those temperatures. If you choose not to purchase one, the result is an express ride straight to the hospital. I'll let you decide.

The second deterrent to surfing on the North Coast is the conditions. The ocean up here is very moody and can be unforgiving. Every year people lose their lives in our rough waters. Despite these obstacles, the ocean can provide absolute freedom. But you have to be on top of your forecasting. You have to know where to go when the wind is out of a certain direction, or when the tide is low or high, and decide where will allow the most opportunity. The National Weather Service is a solid source at www.wr.noaa.gov. It covers everything you need to know before you paddle out, from wind direction and strength to hourly buoy reports.

Though there are many beaches here, some only break certain times of the year on certain swells and tides. Some require low tides and north winds, while others require south winds and a high tide. So get clued into swells, tides, wind, swell periods and wave heights. The most consistent spots for the most fun are around the Moonstone Beach area and College Cove. These beaches are close to one another and both have variances in their waves that allow you to surf them almost year round.

College Cove is a great place because you can do a little bit of everything. People go there to sunbathe on a hot day, rock climb, play with dogs and spend time with family and friends. Of course, there's surfing, as well. This dumpy to mushy beach break has a nearly 270-degree view of a rocky, pine tree dotted shoreline, not to mention a blow hole. It's in a protected cove that blocks most of the larger surf in the winter, creating a manageable sized wave that is generally more sheltered than at other North Coast beaches. The surf isn't huge but it is a fun beach scene and a forgiving location, making this spot great for both beginner and expert surfers alike.

The Moonstone stretch of coast a couple miles to the south is a different story. Much more open to winter-driven storms than College Cove, this beach can still be manageable and fun for all. Bouldering is popular at Houda Point, the beach inshore from the infamous two-humped Camel Rock. This long stretch of beach provides lots of real estate for different waves to form, which offers a variety of peaks for multiple skill sets and surf levels. But with a more exposed beach comes more variation with the weather. Camel Rock has had more than its share of Coast Guard calls and helicopter rescues for swimmers and surfers. It is important to be informed about our powerful local surroundings, for your safety is on the line when approaching the ocean at the wrong place and time. The sea can be powerful and unpredictable. Keep in mind that, when we enter the water here, we enter shark habitat; usually we avoid one another, but occasionally there are run-ins. If you stay away from river mouths and educate yourself about the conditions on a daily basis, you can have a great, safe time.

Whether the surf isn't that good or the water is a little crowded, it shouldn't hinder from the experience you get in the ocean. Both spots are gorgeous to say the least, each with its own unique look. And with beautiful venues like College Cove, Moonstone and Camel Rock, who wouldn't be encouraged to practice? ●

A Midsummer Checklist

What to do in the Garden in July and August

By Heather Jo Flores

downanddirty@northcoastjournal.com

If you're anything like me, this is the time of year you live for. The garden is popping, flowers are blooming, and there's more zucchini than you know what to do with. I could make this a very short column and just say: Relax! Take a nap in the sunshine and eat some berries. You earned it.

But there are still some important things to accomplish this time of year. You probably know this. In fact, you might be totally overwhelmed. So, for this month's column, I thought it would be nice to share my midsummer checklist: the stuff I do every year at this time to increase yields, beautify the garden and help resist disease and insect infestations later in the season.

Weeding. Maybe this is obvious. Weeding needs to happen most of the time anyway. But right now, it might be more crucial. If you have let the weeds go and they are starting to crowd out your veggies, now is your chance to get them out of there before they really start to inhibit air circulation, causing squash and tomatoes to rot, and encouraging aphids and mold. So get out there early in the morning before the heat sets in and take care of the weeds.

Deadheading. Sunflowers, calendula, nasturtiums, zinnias and most other garden flowers will bloom much longer if you go through and remove the spent flowers. If your timing is right, and depending on which plants you're dealing with, this can double as an herb or seed harvest.

Harvesting. This connects to deadheading. Even if you can't eat all of those zukes, pick them anyway. You'll get more zukes, for longer. Pick rotten strawberries and tomatoes. Get that slimy stuff out of the garden to remove the breeding ground for pests and to make space for fresh, healthy fruits. This is also a perfect time to harvest herbs, like rosemary and oregano, when vegetative growth is at its prime but flowers haven't fully matured. Harvest, bundle and hang them in the kitchen to dry.

Cut the Guards. If you have wild blackberries that you enjoy, now is the time to "cut the guards." Look at the hedge. Do you see how the clusters of flowers have thick, spiny, non-fruiting brambles that grow in front of them? Cut those off and the berries to come will get better sun for ripening.

Thin Fruit Trees. Apples, pears, plums, peaches ... all of these will yield larger, healthier fruits if you go through and remove 20 to 50 percent of the unripe ones. Anywhere you see two fruits sashed together, they are competing for light, water and nutrients. Carefully pinch off the smaller one.

Clean Up. Go through and get rid of junk, discarded pots, old piles of weeds and compost. These piles harbor slugs, mold spores and a plethora of other organisms that can cause harm to your garden. Remember that air circulation is just as important as soil, water and sun. Aphids, powdery mildew, black mold — these can be more easily avoided in a garden with plenty of breathing room. By cleaning up the space and eliminating junky air-traps, you protect your plants and also make the space more beautiful for those afternoon yard-naps.

Cut the guards on your blackberry patch to give flowers and immature fruits better access to light and water. Shutterstock

Sow Fall Crops. Now is the time to get your next succession in the ground. As you clear space from weeding, harvesting and cleaning up, filling the ground with new seed helps prevent more weeds from coming in. Direct-sow sunflowers, lettuce, spinach, kale, green beans, peas, squash, beets, amaranth, nasturtium — pretty much anything you planted in early spring is good to go again. Just make sure to keep the beds evenly watered while the seeds are germinating. You can also sow in pots and transplant later when there is more room in the garden, after summer crops are finished.

Check Water. As we move into our driest season, it is important to make sure your automatic watering systems are working properly. Check for leaks, clogs and anything that needs to be repaired so you don't have any unpleasant surprises later.

Mulch and Fertilize. Once you've cleaned it all up, give everything a fresh feeding of fertile compost (or organic fertilizer) and cover with a nice neutral mulch to hold in moisture and keep out weeds. See my article, "Mulch Much," from last year for more information about which mulches to choose and why.

Relax! Honestly, this is just as important as the rest of it. When you take time to "do nothing" in the space you have worked so hard to create, your subconscious mind remembers why you love to garden. Your nervous system settles down. Sometimes I have to stop, lay down, and make sure that all of my garden time isn't spent hunching over, killing stuff, whacking stuff around ... working. This is your Eden — enjoy it. ●

Summer Stock

Soups for zucchini season

By Andrea Juarez

tabletalk@northcoastjournal.com

Your summer zucchini will shine in these two soup recipes perfect for a cool North Coast summer evening: sopa de calabacitas y elote, Mexican zucchini corn soup, and Peruvian caldo de gallina, chicken soup.

The creamy zucchini corn soup was inspired by a gorgeous one I ate many, many years ago in Cuernavaca, Mexico. I was on an extended stay after I left my gig in Austin, Texas, to study and travel in Mexico. It was a life-changing experience.

I lived part of the time with a local family and, lucky for me, in addition to improving my Spanish, I dined on some fantastic food. Josephina, the mujer de the casa (lady of the house) and my Spanish teacher, introduced me to a vast repertoire of Mexican cuisine. She made exquisite meals every day — sometimes with fancy ingredients and preparations and other times simple. Our main meal of the day was served early afternoon and almost always started with soup.

One day she prepared a creamy zucchini soup that I immediately adored — simple, light and comforting. Her version was a pureed zucchini with stock and cream (which could easily be adapted from the recipe below). My version has additional texture from diced zucchini, plus fresh corn and cilantro.

The second soup and one of my favorite soups is caldo de gallina con quinoa (chicken soup with quinoa). It was inspired by the first meal I ate in Cuzco, Peru. The city is the primary entry point for all the folks like me who set out to visit Machu Picchu and sits at about 11,000 feet in altitude, which means it gets chilly at night. The chicken soup was memorable, however the alpaca that I also ordered was not.

The aji Amarillo chili in the recipe is a Peruvian chili with mild to moderate heat. It is standard in Peruvian cuisine and can be found ground in spice stores or in Hispanic markets. Last summer my local chili guy Dean Gilkerson from Earth-N-Hands offered plenty of variety. You can also substitute with jalapeños or other chilis. It's part of what makes this soup a brothy fix that will take away the chill, clear the head and sinuses (if you're battling a summer cold), and soothe your soul.

This soup is packed with protein since it has chicken and the “Mother Grain,” quinoa.

Mexican Zucchini Corn Soup, Sopa de Calabacitas y Elote

If you like, add shrimp or white fish along with the corn and diced zucchini. Serves 4.

2 tablespoons olive oil
¼ cup onion, diced small
4 cups zucchini, cut into 1-inch pieces
1 large garlic clove, minced
4 cups chicken stock or vegetable stock
½ teaspoon salt
3 cups fresh corn (about 3 cobs worth)
1 cup zucchini, diced finely
¼ cup crema Mexicana or cream
½ cup fresh cilantro, chopped

In a medium stock pot over medium heat, add the olive oil and onions, and sauté until the onions become translucent. Add 4 cups of zucchini and sauté for several minutes until the zucchini barely start to brown and become tender. Add the garlic and sauté about 1 minute, stirring frequently so that it does not burn. Add the stock and salt. Bring it to a boil and reduce the heat to a simmer for about 10 minutes or until the zucchini is completely tender.

Puree the sautéed mixture with a hand emulsifier (or blender—carefully in batches).

In a medium bowl, mix about 1 cup of the pureed soup with the crema or cream. Mix well with a whisk or the emulsifier to incorporate. Slowly pour the creamy mixture to the soup, mixing well.

Add the corn and finely diced zucchini, and simmer another 5 minutes until the zucchini are barely tender. Adjust the seasoning to taste. Serve hot or room temperature as a first course or side, garnished with fresh cilantro. For an extra elegant presentation, add a fresh zucchini flower.

Peruvian Chicken Quinoa Soup, Caldo de Gallina con Quinoa

Serves 4–6

Ingredients

1 ½ tablespoons oil
1 small onion, diced small
3 celery stalks, diced small
4 cloves garlic, minced
2 ½ teaspoons ground aji amarillo
½ teaspoon ground cumin

1 teaspoon dried oregano
1 ½ pounds chicken (2 large breasts), skinned and cut into 4-inch pieces
10 cups water
2 teaspoons salt
2 medium potatoes or sweet potatoes, skin on, diced into 2-inch pieces
1 cup quinoa, rinsed
3 carrots, peeled and diced into 1-inch pieces
2 small zucchini, diced into 1-inch pieces
Juice of ½ a lemon

½ cup fresh cilantro, chopped

Rinse quinoa well and drain; prepare and measure all other ingredients in advance.

In a large, heavy pot or Dutch oven, sauté the onion and celery in oil for 3 minutes. Add the garlic, aji Amarillo chili, cumin and oregano. Sauté for 1 minute. Add the chicken, water, salt, potatoes and quinoa. Bring the pot to a boil, cover and reduce the heat to medium. Skim off any foam.

After the chicken has cooked (about 20 minutes), remove it and shred the meat with two forks. Set it aside, keeping it warm. Add the carrots to the soup and cook for 15 minutes until the potatoes are tender but intact and the quinoa is fluffy with its germs separated. Add the zucchini and lemon juice, then cook 10 minutes or until the zucchini are al dente. Return the shredded chicken to the pot and heat throughout.

Serve hot, garnished with fresh cilantro.

A Fistful of Appreciation

By Andy Powell

thesetlist@northcoastjournal.com

A couple of music festivals are now behind us with the Folklife Festival and Northern Nights having just wrapped up. But with upcoming festivals on the horizon such as the Roll on the Mattole and the Reggae On the River festivals, we don't have too much time to relax and put our feet up before heading out to chase the music again.

Many of the summer music festivals that pull talent from out of the area reimburse artists for their performance (good luck trying to get a regional powerhouse of a band to trek all the way up to Humboldt for no guarantee of cash). But many of the more locally focused festivals — often put on as fundraisers for not-for-profits — can't afford to pay all/any of the musicians. It's generally not because they don't want to, it's just not in their budgets.

Newer local bands are often happy to play for a built-in crowd simply for the chance to debut their music, garner new fans or, sometimes, simply for free beer. More established local bands used to making some money from gigging — by “some,” I mean just enough for gas — are often happy to support the nonprofit and the good work they do locally. Much like all the volunteers and board members who spend countless hours putting on a festival, local musicians and artists throw in for the cause as well.

What is nice to see, however, is that our community cares about our musicians. While at the All-Day Free Festival portion of the Folklife Festival this past Saturday, I was pleased to see volunteers at the entry points to the Rooney Amphitheater with donation/tip jars for the performing musicians. I can't recall if this was done in previous years, but I noticed it this time. As I wadded up a few bills and shoved them into the can, I couldn't help but see how many other bills were in there. I made a point throughout the day to see if folks coming into the event would avoid the tip collectors, as this was a “free” event. To my surprise/delight, a majority of people coming in seemed only too happy to throw some money into the pot to be spread out among all the musicians.

Now, I won't pretend that any of the performers over this week-long festival will be able to take their monies to the bank, or even buy new strings. But to see the acknowledgement from the audience that what these musicians (who weren't asking for a dime) were doing was worthwhile and valuable, that was another metaphorical feather in Humboldt's metaphorical cap. Are we perfect? Far from it. However, perhaps one of the many reasons Humboldt has such a concentration of artists is because, not only are they able to simply practice their art up here, but they are also well appreciated while doing it.

Thursday

If you like bluegrass, and you like it on Thursday nights, well, tonight's your night. Fresh off of Bluegrass Night at the Folklife Festival — on a Thursday night I believe — Thursday Night Bluegrass will be performing at Six Rivers Brewery (top of the hill) in McKinleyville at 8:30 p.m. If you missed them at the Festival, or just want to catch 'em again, they're playing for free tonight so your excuses for missing them are limited. For those a bit more psychedelically inclined, head over to the Little Red Lion Cocktail Lounge in Eureka tonight for Crook & The Bluff, on tour and traveling from the high hot deserts of Utah. Their songs depict “lust, love, murder and malevolence” so, you know, rock. This quartet throws a bit of western and blues into their desert rock sound, which seems like a winning combo. Not exactly sure on the time or cost, but probably something close to 9 p.m. and $5, if I had to guess.

Friday

Former local Hazel Rickard of Hazel Ra is coming back to her hometown with her “four-piece dream-folk band,” which now calls St. Louis home. Hazel's songs are given some extra polish by nice vocal harmonies, an electric guitar and a cello. Starting the show off around 8 p.m. at The Sanctuary tonight will be Ferndalian Johnny Houx with some of his original songs. It's a $5 sliding scale tonight, I believe, but feel free to share with the musicians. Long-time locals — and Muddy Waters stage sharers — Buddy Reed and th' Rip It Ups are making an appearance tonight at Six Rivers Brewery around 9 p.m. Expect some gutbucket and gut punchin' blues while at this free show and, as always, feel free to kick some extra cash the band's way. Blue Lake Casino hosts Dr. Squid tonight at 9 p.m. playing a smorgasbord of dance and rock hits for your movement pleasure. No cover charge for this one. Also bringing the rock and hits tonight are fellow locals Nighthawk, who will be playing at the same time (same price) at the Bear River Casino. Choose wisely.

Saturday

I'm still embarrassed to say that, not only have I never been to a Roll on the Mattole, but in my 16 years here in Humboldt, I've still never made it out to “the Mattole,” or Petrolia or Honeydew. I won't be able to make this year's Roll — the 27th — either, unfortunately, but that is more reason why you should. This festival kicks off around noon and benefits the Honeydew Volunteer Fire Company with local musical acts and vendors. Tickets are $25 (kids 12 and under are free) and will support a necessary local service. Farther North, you'll find Crested Hens at the Westhaven Center for the Arts at 7:30 p.m. Comprised of Seabury Gould on a couple different instruments and Liz Thompson on cello, you can expect Celtic tunes and “visionary songs” with some originals thrown in to boot. This one's got a $5 to $15 sliding scale. Listening to a bit of Ezza Rose online while writing this column, I was reminded of the rich vocals and reverb of Mazzy Starr with the delicate and sparse guitar work. These Portland-based rockers will be making an appearance tonight at The Miniplex in Arcata, and I'm hearing they'll be joined by ex-local [Big Play] Ray Johnson (The Cutters, The Lowlights, etc.) on the drums. They will be receiving local support from the “multi-media juggernaut” of The Comix Trip along with Leone. This show starts around 9 p.m. and has a $5 cover at the door. I can only admit to having seen Cold Blue Water once, but I was definitely impressed with the talent and overall sound of the band. I can't recall exactly all of the songs that comprised a pretty serious classic rock medley they pulled off — The Doors/Beatles/Zeppelin? — but it was really well done. Maybe they'll pull it out for you tonight at this free show at the Blue Lake Casino at 9 p.m.

Sunday

If an early show today is your thing, Trinidad is the place to be. Vocal quartet The Love Notes will be performing to raise funds to restore the 143-year-old Holy Trinity Church in said hamlet by the sea. For a suggested $10 to $15 donation, you can expect to hear four-part harmonies from classic folk standards, classic standards and also some contemporary Catholic songs (fitting for the setting), starting at 3 p.m. Not far away, the Light-house Grill has music performed gratis by JD Jeffries and Devin Paine starting around 5 p.m. Back in Arcata, The Miniplex has Go Dark up from the East Bay (Oakland to be exact). Merrick tells me Go Dark is “the latest iteration from producer/poet/vocalist/Anticon, co-founder Dose-one.” He goes on to tell me it is uncompromising hip-hop, 8 Bit (?), and Synth Pop anthems. Now I'm feeling old. All this at 9 p.m. and for only $5. As of press time, the opener is TBA.

Stop, Drop and Roll

Stop wondering what you're doing this Saturday, drop a few dollars in your pocket and roll out to the Mattole Grange, July 23 for the 27th annual Roll on the Mattole from noon to midnight ($25, $20 students/seniors, free for kids 12 and under with an adult). The Roll is a full day in the sun with friends, food and firefighting bad-assery. In a word, hot.

The fun starts at noon with music by the Bluff Creek Boys, and the beat goes on all day with performances from Mehael Kavanaugh, Lost Coast Marimbas, Black Star Safari, Non-Prophets, Vidagua and Stevie Culture. Boogie and mingle with the good-vibed crowd, check out the local craft vendor booths, enjoy beer and barbecue, and watch the kids romp in the Kid's Zone.

Things heat up from 4 to 6 p.m. with the Wildland Firefighter Challenge, where crews from the Honeydew, Petrolia, Whale Gulch and Telegraph Ridge volunteer fire companies/departments compete in drills (in full firefighting gear) for the sought-after "trophy." This is tough work. And, did we mention, it's hot? After the challenge, there's an auction raffle and more music and dancing.

The HVFC is 100-percent volunteer run and a nonprofit, so the money raised at the Roll allows it to keep doing what it does — protecting and serving the four neighborhoods of Wilder Ridge, Panther Gap, Windy Nip and Honeydew. So come on out, have a great time and support your local firefighters.

Of Ectoplasm and Narcs

Ghostbusters, Infiltrators cross streams

By John J. Bennett

filmland@northcoastjournal.com

Reviews

GHOSTBUSTERS. I would love to write an impassioned defense of the new Ghostbusters. I would find it deeply satisfying, both as a fan of the original and as a person who, hating few things in this world, passionately hates misogynistic Internet trolls. But there are mitigating factors, first and foremost: the movie itself.

The problem with this particular reboot has nothing to do with its casting. More to the point, it could only possibly be helped by the fact it stars four devastatingly funny women, all with formidable talent for commanding the screen. And while the prospect of a reboot is an inherently dicey one — especially when the source material is so well known by so many — that isn't really the problem, either (it does bring up a few issues, but more on that in a minute). Obviously, I can really speak only for myself, but I believe audiences for the most part are with me in the willingness to go into this one with an open mind. Maybe with a positive bias, even, based on the strength of the cast or the reunion of director Paul Feig and screenwriter Katie Dippold (The Heat, 2013).

So the problem with Ghostbusters isn't its bonafides; it just isn't funny enough. Rather, it isn't funny often enough. The tone and pace of the piece start to sway drunkenly from arch-goofiness to glum solemnity in the opening, which can't even be saved by the consistently hilarious Zach Woods. The rest, despite flashes of high comedy, follows suit.

After the introduction of the ghosts, we move on to our leads. Erin Gilbert (Kristen Wiig), a physicist vying for tenure at Columbia University, fears for her future in academia when a book she co-authored with Abby Yates (Melissa McCarthy), positing the existence of ghosts, re-surfaces online. She tracks Abby to her laboratory at a cut-rate college, where she and engineering savant/genuine weirdo Jillian Holtzmann (Kate McKinnon) have been developing ghost hunting tools and methodology with minimal oversight from the administration. The powers that be (represented in a great cameo by Steve Higgins), catch on quickly though, and Abby and Holtzmann are soon out of a job. And after some dramatic supernatural documentation video goes viral, so is Erin.

The three hang up a shingle as paranormal investigators, hire an impossibly incapable/good-looking receptionist (Chris Hemsworth), passively recruit Patty (Leslie Jones) and get down to the business of bustin' ghosts. They soon get hip to an interlinked series of occurrences enacted by a pasty little villain (Neil Casey), hoping to foment cataclysm; the ladies have their work cut out for them.

Ghostbusters, circa 1984, still looms large on my movie landscape. Yes, it is now plowing into its mid-30s, much as it pains me to admit it, but thanks to our multitudinous "content delivery systems" and "media platforms" and "streaming services" and "devices," it is now more available than ever before. So even if the primary audience for the 2016 version isn't as well-versed in the lore as, well, me for instance, it likely has at least a passing familiarity with it. And the secondary (read: older) audience must be so steeped in it as to make refraining from comparing the two all but impossible.

So the only hope, one might think, would be to make the new one really new, somehow remarkable, revolutionary rather than evolutionary. While Feig makes savvy use of current CGI technology to achieve an undeniably modern look to the effects, he isn't breaking any molds stylistically. Not that we should expect that: he's always been a bit of a formalist, and that's perfectly respectable. So the big coup here, ostensibly, is in the casting, which I find troublesome. Troublesome because it is the year 2016 and casting women in lead roles in an action movie or a comedy or whatever it may be should not be surprising. But there it is.

Perhaps more to the point, Feig and Dippold's version of this story is so over-burdened by effects sequences that it often forgets to be a comedy. Long stretches go under-punctuated by jokes, and some of those only amount to half-funny pratfalls. There are strong laughs along the way, but inconsistently and sparsely placed. The four leads are great, as one would expect, with McKinnon in particular doing hilarious, bizarre, surprising and under-utilized work. PG13. 117M. BROADWAY, MILL CREEK.

THE INFILTRATOR. As with his last effort (Runner Runner, 2013) director Brad Furman takes a formidable cast, a fascinating story, an unexpectedly distinctive visual style and assembles a movie that doesn't quite live up to any of its attributes. While good enough, it shows potential for a greatness it never achieves.

If someone asks if you're a goddess, say yes!

Tampa, 1985: U.S. Customs agent and family man Bob Mazur (Bryan Cranston) develops a revelatory attack on the Medellin Cartel. Using contacts nurtured by fellow undercover agent Emir Abreu (John Leguizamo), he poses as a mobbed-up finance guy offering to launder cocaine cash. After some scary auditions, he's in and becomes the right hand and personal friend of Escobar lieutenant Roberto Alcaino (Benjamin Bratt).

These "in too deep" undercover stories are pretty familiar by now, (see: In Too Deep, 1999) and, despite its strengths, The Infiltrator doesn't get far enough below the surface to distinguish itself. There are glimmers: Mazur's relationship to his fake-fiance and fellow agent Kathy Ertz (Diane Kruger) hints at the intimacy of two people sharing an unspeakably intense secret; violence erupts in unexpected instants; Mazur's family life is strained by his commitment to the job. None of these notions are fully enough explored to elevate The Infiltrator beyond popcorn level, though. R. 127M. BROADWAY.

Ryan – Front End Manager

I moved to Humboldt County to attend College of the Redwoods, then attended Humboldt State where I graduated with a B.S. in Forestry in 2007. My tenure at ENF began in May of 2010, where I work in the produce department.

Fallon – Wellness Manager

I have spent my days studying, working and owning my own businesses in the floriculture, horticulture and agriculture industries. The past two years I transitioned into assistant managing the Wellness Department at ENF and am so honored for the opportunity to manage the Wellness Department in McKinleyville.

Nick – Meat Manager

I'm a military veteran and a graduate of San Diego State University. I have been involved in the natural foods business for over 15 years and have been a meat cutter for over 20 years. I am passionate about healthy, responsibly raised foods and enjoy offering the best possible product to our customers.

Waylon – Kitchen Manager

I have been involved in foodservices for over a decade. I became interested in locally sourced, natural and organic foods after living abroad. I moved to Humboldt with my family to be at the epicenter of the natural foods and non-GMO movement. In my free time I love to cook, garden and home brewing mead.

Joe – Produce Manager

I moved to Humboldt County in 2001 for the relaxed atmosphere. I enjoy gardening, cooking, and exploring the beauty our region provides with my awesome dog Kaya. I have an extensive work history in the natural and organic foods industry, including being Assistant Produce Manager at ENF since 2009.

Felipe – Grocery Manager

I was born in Mexico and have spent the last 26 years in Humboldt. I've worked at Eureka Natural Foods for the past 10 years and cannot wait to bring my passion for natural foods to McKinleyville. In my spare time I love hiking with my two kids and wife.
